Cover: A micrograph obtained from a retina 15 days after surgical removal of the original retina. PCNA (Proliferating Cell Nuclear Antigen) was used as a marker for actively proliferating cells in the regenerating retina. The left image shows fluorescence image of the regenerating retina. Several PCNA-immunoreactive cells are detected along the vast vitreal surface of the retina. The same field was photographed under both fluorescence and translucent lights in the right image. The PCNA-immunoreactive cells are lightly pigmented. This may suggest that RPE cells are about to dedifferentiate and proliferate, while losing pigment granules. See Sakai and Saito, pages 377–390, this issue.

Circadian Rhythms in Screening Pigment and Invaginating Organelles in Photoreceptor Terminals of the Housefly's First Optic Neuropile / 517
E. Pyza and I.A. Meinertzhagen

Cover: Computer 3-D reconstructions from serial EM of part of the axon and the dendritic spines of L2, a monopolar cell in the first optic neuropile of the fly's optic lobe, and two of its six inputs, the cylindrical photoreceptor terminals. The latter are the most recently identified site of circadian rhythmicity in the housefly, Musca, amongst granules of screening pigment, movements of which are analyzed in Pyza and Meinertzhagen (pp. 517–529, this issue) that complement previous descriptions of circadian changes in L2 (E. Pyza and I.A. Meinertzhagen, J. Neurosci. 15: 407–418, 1995).

Molecular Cloning and Brain Localization of HZF-2 α , a New Member of the Rev-erb Subfamily of Orphan Nuclear Receptors / 640
Sandra Peña-de-Ortiz and Gordon A. Jamieson, Jr.

Cover: Neurons arising from an adult rat subependymal zone explant, taken from a 20-month-old senescent rat forebrain. Raised in BDNF (20 ng/mL), and double-labeled after 12 days in vitro for the neuronal markers MAP-2 (green) and Hu protein (red). This suggests the persistence of subependymal neuronal progenitor cells into late adulthood. See Goldman et al., pages 554–566, this issue.
